The order of the Devanāgarī alphabet has been followed in the indexes for the Indo-Aryan languages. The four literary Dravidian languages, Tamil, Malayalam Kannaḍa, Telugu, have alphabets whose order is similar to that of the Devanāgarī; at the beginning of each of these indexes there is an indication of how the extra letters at the end of the alphabet are ordered. In the entries of the dictionary dialect material has been quoted for these languages, especially for Tamil and Kannaḍa, with an indication of dialect occurrence and sources. In the indexes such material is incorporated without indication that it is dialectal, except that Badaga material is listed separately at the end of the Kannaḍa index. The transcription in the sources for dialect material at times involves phonetic writing that departs from the standard spelling. These items are usually inserted in the indexes at the place required by the standard equivalents (e.g. in Tamil an occurrence of -δ- is in the order of -t-).

The alphabetical order in the indexes of the other languages is in general that of the chief published sources. The Devanāgarī order is followed by the majority. Arrangement in the order of the Roman alphabet is followed for Kota, Toda, Koḍagu, Kolami, Naikṛi, Naiki of Chanda, Kui, Kuṛux, Malto, and Brahui; for each language an indication is provided of the order of characters with diacritics. For any language indexed in the Roman alphabet, the position of an aspirated stop (e.g. ph) follows all occurrences of the corresponding non-aspirated stop (e.g. p).

To cut down the inordinate length of the indexes, successive items referring to the same dictionary entry have often been unified. Moreover, items that should strictly have been separated by one or occasionally even two or more other items have often been unified. Such displacements disturb the alphabetical order, but will hardly cause inconvenience to the attentive user.

GONDI

The order is that of the Devanāgarī alphabet, with extra letters with diacritics added in the following order: r r̥ ṛ; l ḷ; ʔ at the end. The double rr which appears in many recordings represents Dravidian alveolar *ṟ; it follows r. Its voiceless variant, transcribed as ḥ, follows it (or ṛ). Variant forms of words are given in the same entry if the differences are not too great; otherwise they are separately indexed. Verbs are given in the infinitve when these forms are given in the sources; otherwise the root form is given.

KUWI

In DED the material of Schulze and Fitzgerald was indexed separately. In DEDR there is a combined index, which is possible as a result of the normalization of Schulze's transcription and because the principal authority is now the work of M. Israel. His forms are taken as normal, and the orthographical variations in the other sources are ignored. On the other hand, variations which are dialectal rather than orthographical are entered. In the case of words in the other sources which are not recorded by Israel, the form most consistent with his system of transliteration is used and other spelling varieties are ignored. Verbs are given in the root form if recorded by Israel or by Burrow and Bhattacharya; if the source is Schulze or Fitzgerald, the infinitive forms used by them are given.

The order is that of the Devanāgarī alphabet, with ṛ following r, and ˀ at the end of the alphabet.

KURUX

The order is that of the Roman alphabet, with diagraphs and letters with diacritics added in the following order: b bh; d dh ḍ; k kh; l ḷ; n ṇ ń ñ/ŋ; r ṛ; t ṭ; ' is added at the end of the alphabet. Superscript vowels are alphabetized is if on the line. A nasalized vowel follows the corresponding non-nasalized vowel. We have replaced kh of the major sources and our earlier work by x, since it is now clear that a voiceless velar fricative is intended; in this we follow Pfeiffer.

BRAHUI

The order is that of the Roman alphabet, with diagraphs and letters with diacritics added in the following order: d ḍ; g g̱h; l ḻh; r ṛ; s sh; t ṭ; a nasalized vowel follows the corresponding non-nasalized vowel (very few instances). The diagraph ḵh of the major source and our earlier work has been replaced by x, the voiceless velar fricative, in its proper alphabetical order. h represents dialectally h, a glottal stop (i.e. ʔ), and zero (see Emeneau 1980b.21).

INDEX OF ENGLISH MEANINGS

THIS is an index of the more important meanings recorded for words in the Dravidian languages. No attempt has been made to list all the English meanings given in the entries, since such a procedure would have swollen this index beyond all reason. In fact, in an attempt to keep it within bounds, usually only one of a group of synonyms or near-synonyms has been listed; e.g. resemble is listed, but not similar and like; decay, but not rot; laugh, but not smile; ant (white), but not termite. The derivational system of English words, since it does not coincide with that of Dravidian, has in general been ignored; e.g. break includes references to both intransitive and transitive verbs, bud or thunder or scratch to both nouns and verbs. This has led sometimes to a clustering of several English words in one entry (e.g. twelve and twenty, grief and grieve, length, lengthen, and long), which has sometimes been achieved by such entries as great(ness) or confuse(d); at times, however, one of an English derivational cluster has been listed and the other or others omitted in order to save repetition of long strings of identical references (e.g. heat, but not hot; proud, but not pride; destroy, but not destruction). English homonyms have in general been separated. Sometimes, however, it has been impossible (and unnecessary) to make decisions about English near-homonyms, and everything has been lumped under one gloss; e.g. call (= summon, shout, name), cry (= weep, shout), scratch (= itch, make mark), plait (of hair or of cloth).

Names of botanical species have been separately listed in an Index of Flora. This is given in two parts, one for the Latin terms, the other headed 'English and Anglo-Indian'. The latter includes some vernacular names as they were commonly used by the English in India (e.g. banyan, pipal, huriallee, sāl). Rice is entered in the general index because of the many references to cultural processes involving rice that are found in the dictionary and that would be out of place in the botanical index.
